'Tyrant' Agreement Reached Between Twentieth Century Fox and King Midas World Entertainment

THE WRAP By Jason Hughes
Concerning Hollywood July 21, 2014 10:19 PM

King Midas World Entertainment and Twentieth Century Fox have reached an agreement on "Tyrant." FX has a new drama on the air under that title, about an American family that is drawn into the political turmoil of a Middle Eastern nation. King Midas, on the other hand, has a superhero property under the same name, also identified as Tyrant Knight.

The superhero "Tyrant" was created by Fabrizio Boccardi, CEO of King Midas World Entertainment, with the intention of launching a franchise and creating a global brand. "We have big plans for this property, which are actively in development and others that we are pursuing also with sizable investments and qualified partnerships and licensing agreements," Boccardi said in a statement.

The first chapter of Boccardi's story was published in 2008's "The Seven Sins: The Tyrant Ascending." It has been licensed to DC Comics for comic book publication, is in active development for a feature film, and has a licensing agreement with Beanstalk.
